Impact of Theatre Arts on Society

Sumit Kumar Thakur

Abstract

‘Theatre is the mirror of society’. Theatre art is one of the vast art form in the performing arts, which includes all aspects of performances like acting, singing, dancing, martial arts etc. This study is analytical in nature which is based on the comprehensive review of literature and empirical analysis. Existing researches about Theatre art highlight the development of people living in the society including actor’s craft. In India we have great Sanskrit treatise named Natyashastra, written by sage Bharat Muni between 200 BC and 200 CE, was translated in various languages. It depicts various aspects of skills, knowledge, sculpture, people, yoga etc. This article focuses on the impact of Theatre arts through dramatic performances on people living in the society. What we do in our life, we present through theatrical performances. However, in various ways, both positive and negative endings give important lessons to the people living in the society. In Greek Theatre there is a term ‘catharsis’ which means realization that happens just after watching the dramatic performance experienced by the common people. This article highlights the advantage of practicing and experiencing theatre arts as a performer and spectator, and challenges in the journey faces by the organizations or performers. The article focuses the study and analyze on the advantages, benefits, challenges and impact of Theatre arts on society in the journey of making a better, aware and responsible people of society.
